If the FCC is concerned about local station ownership, the rule concerning a local studio location requirement needs to be reinstated. Otherwise, one organization can control many stations from one central location which can suppress local ownership. Currently there is an organization that has over 1100 stations throughout the United States that it owns from one location. It appears that there are very few new owners that can compete in this type of environment. Hence, this would require the limitation on the number of stations owned in a particular market.
